AI for more efficient production processes

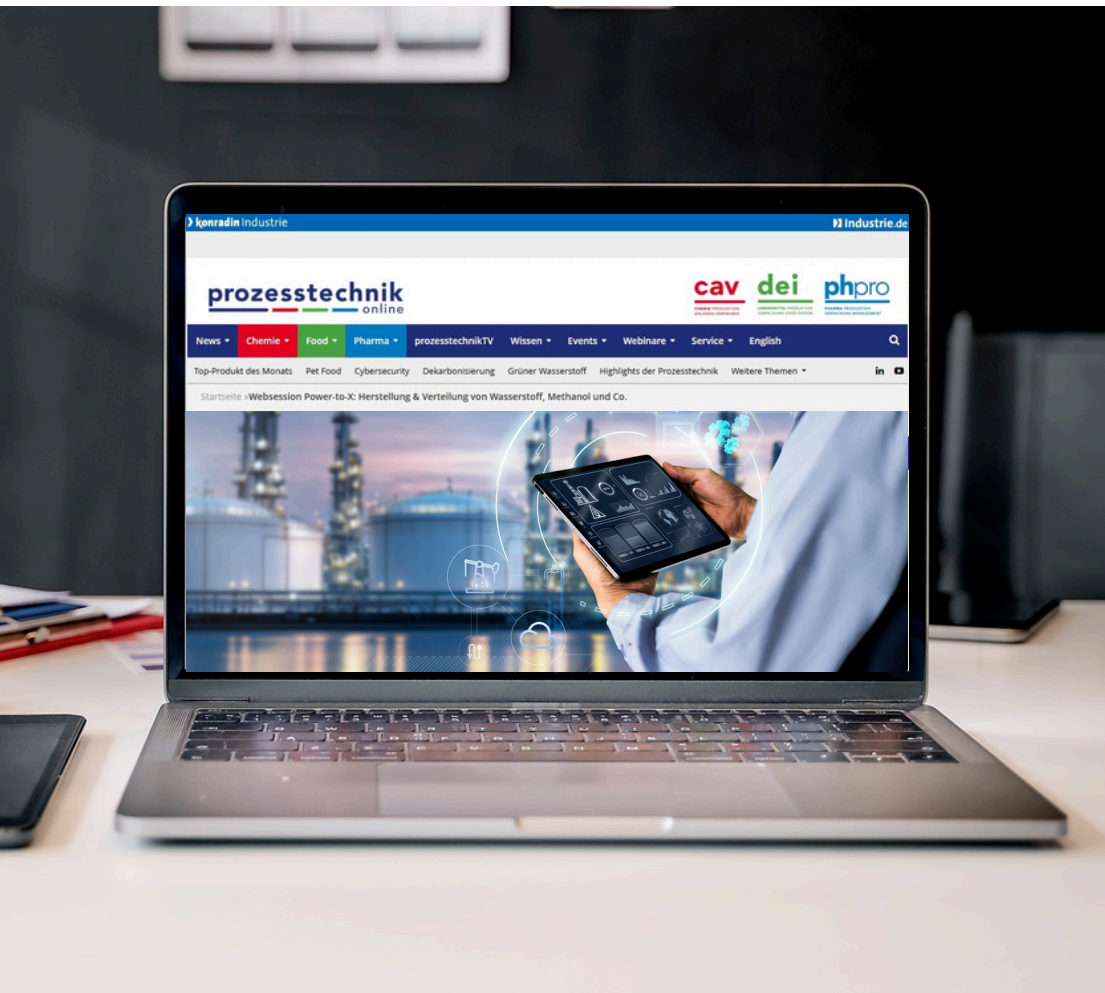

Artificial intelligence is optimising production processes in the chemical industry. It analyses large volumes of data, monitors plants in real time and identifies deviations before they become critical. The result: more efficient processes, lower energy and raw material consumption, and higher product quality. AI also enables predictive maintenance strategies that minimise downtime and improve occupational safety.

The web session presents the latest developments and practical AI-powered tools for making production more economical and sustainable.

Target Group:

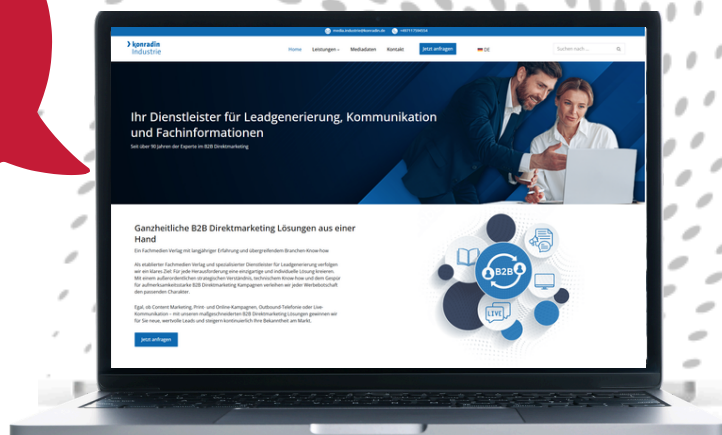

- Specialists and managers from the chemical, pharmaceutical, and plant and equipment manufacturing industries
- Managers from production, process engineering, engineering and automation
- Experts in digitalization, AI and process optimization
- Specialists in maintenance and project management
